At its center is Radomir Pavlović, a successful and widely admired philosophy professor in his mid-forties, at the height of his career, yet quietly adrift. When a sudden event disrupts his carefully built life, Radomir returns to his hometown in the heart of Serbia, a place that feels both familiar and strangely distant. As he retraces his steps, he is confronted not only with the people and memories he left behind, but also with the growing sense that he no longer belongs anywhere. Along the way, a series of unexpected encounters begin to reshape his understanding of himself and the world around him.
